The office of the registrar for the Government of The United States of America is a successor office of the original Confederacy of 1781. Today the office is an appointed position from members of the North American National Party that amended the original Articles of Confederation in political convention.

The amendments were intended in 1787 which did not happen therefore had to be completed to correct chain of title.

Two amendments were from a Confederacy of states to a republic of people and a National Government for the purpose of claiming a Nationality.

Description:

The office of the registrar records documents which cost 15 USD per document. Those recorded documents can be found here: <http://www.theunitedstatesofamerica1781.org>

Recording documents in original venue certifies authentication of documents and corrects chain of title.

The office of the registrar reserves the right to refuse certain documents. This reservation is for the protection of the individual recording the document(s).
